

Caprice

DAVID SHAW
JUNE 8TH, 2023

BREAD SELECTION

French petit baguette, sourdough, semolina, pain au lait, sesame roll

OBSIBLUE

French Obsibblue prawn on top of dill cream topped with medallions of marinated radish and lemon jelly

ALASKAN KING CRAB

Crustacean jelly, Gillardeau oyster and Oscietre prestige caviar from “La Maison Kaviari”
Served with fennel cream and baby coriander

LAND AND SEA TARTARE

Australian wagyu beef and Gillardeau oyster tartare with snow pea and modern barbecue sauce
Topped with Kristal caviar, garnished with slow cooked egg yolk and parsley sauce

BOUILLABAISSE

Chef’s special bouillabaisse of Japanese red mullet with saffron potato
Sphere of lemon fennel condiment, and lemon verbena jam

VELOUTÉ

Green asparagus velouté with rosemary royale custard, St. Felicien cheese ravioli with praline of candied almond

BRITTANY SOLE

Brittany fresh sole stuffed with chicken coriander mousse finished with lemon zest and a modern xo sauce
Served with white asparagus two ways: whole glazed white asparagus with chicken jus and shrimp, and brunoise of white asparagus and mussels

FRENCH VEAL

French veal saddle with saffron veal jus with sherry vinegar
Served with carrot three ways: carrot flan with saffron and ginger, carrot carpaccio, and whole baked carrot with bacon and chives

STRAWBERRY

Strawberry yogurt mousse with toasted almond and strawberry vanilla ice cream

SOUFFLÉ

Seasonal chocolate soufflé served with vanilla gelato

PETIT FOURS

Choux with chocolate cream with rice puff and torched marshmallow
Housemade sesame caramel chocolate
Milk tart with caramel jus

With its perfect location on the sixth floor of the imposing Four Seasons hotel overlooking the magnificent Victoria harbor, the Caprice restaurant immediately separates itself from other fine dining restaurants. This is not a niche place that serves no more than twenty guests per night, yet this is also not one of those most luxurious French restaurant nestling inside a palace like the Alain Ducasse au Plaza Athénée. This is Caprice, a high-end French haute cuisine restaurant settled at the heart of the Oriental pearl. The interior is somewhat classical yet with a touch of uniqueness that is reminiscent of a gigantic buffet room at those Chinese grand hotels. As per our request, we are ushered into the corner table by the window with a gorgeous view of the harbor.

With a quick confirmation of our water preference and menu selection, our lunch soon departs on a standard and flawless bread selection. Soon being presented is the amuse bouche dish, which centers on the rare French Obsiblué prawn. Immersed in the refreshing dill cream, the prawn's fresh umami and natural sweetness is able to shine through while being harmonized with the creaminess and the herbal aroma. The dish is further topped with medallions of marinated radish and lemon jelly, adding another layer of acidity and succulency to counter the heat. The use of cream serves as a French icon here, yet it is light enough to delivery essential refreshingness in this dish served in summertime.

Following the amuse bouche are two of Caprice's most famous dishes. Both featuring precious caviar, the first dish consists of Alaskan king crab, crustacean jelly, Gillardeau oyster, and Oscietre prestige caviar from "La Maison Kaviar," and further served with fennel cream and baby coriander. The mellow crab meat rendezvous with the voluptuous nutty Gillardeau oyster, detonating a bomb of umami beneath the waves. The sensation is further enhanced by the delicate caviar, which not only provides an explosive texture on the mouth but introduces a refreshing salinity to balance the crab's sweetness as well. Albeit its lusciousness, the idea behind the creation is somewhat ubiquitous and thus lack of certain creativities. Dishes with similar concept could be seen at restaurants of Joel Robuchon and Alain Ducasse. The second dish, in which Gillardeau oyster is again incorporated, showcasing a beef tartare with a modern twist of the classical "surf and turf". Paired with the Australian wagyu beef tartare are Gillardeau oyster, snow pea, modern barbecue sauce, garnished with dots of slow cooked egg yolk and parsley sauce on the side, and most importantly topped with Kristal caviar, a different variety from the previous dish.

The following velouté presents itself as a captivating hybrid of a soup dish and cheese course. At its center lies a small ravioli of St. Felicien cheese ensconced within the folds of tender asparagus ribbons. The small ravioli carries a velvety textures yet divulges a tangy sharp kick that sets a high threshold for diners. A candied almond praline graces the pinnacle of the ravioli, homaging the tradition of a cheese service. Surrounding the cheese island is a swamp of asparagus, with a grassy and almost sulfuric, yet implicitly sweet and bitter terrain. As we further dig into the bowl, a different texture and flavor emerges beneath the velouté. It turns out to be the rosemary royale custard. Herbal, mellow, and creamy, the custard soothes the tongue with a gentle caress.

As we linger on the waves of oceanic umami, two soup dishes arrive at the table. Both with French heritage, the first soup showcases a slightly altered interpretation of the traditional Bouillabaisse, while the second features a rare velouté with cheese ravioli. The Bouillabaisse, a capricious mixture of various fish originating from the Marseille fish market, is transformed into a delicacy with a small medallion of Japanese red mullet at its center. The mullet fish is further paired with saffron potatoes, a sphere of lemon fennel condiment, and lemon verbena jam. Some foreign components are introduced here to unsettle the initial flavor profile, leading to a somewhat bitter and harsh undertone.

If one were to accuse Caprice of being a stubborn traditionalist, they would be pleasantly surprised by the two main courses that follow the soup courses, as they are nothing short of mind-blowing. The two main courses utilizes local Cantonese elements in a contemporary manner, thereby infusing fresh life into these traditional French dishes. Spotlight falls on the precious sole fish traveled from Brittany. Centers on a sole fish “en roulade” artfully stuffed with a delicate chicken coriander mousse, the dish is further adorned elegantly with a touch of lemon zest. The celebration of the "en roulade" tradition is complemented by the accompaniment of white asparagus prepared in two distinct ways: whole glazed white asparagus served with a velvety chicken jus and succulent shrimp, alongside a brunoise of white asparagus and tender mussels. The magic here is the luscious modern XO sauce. It carries the voluptuous capriciousness of a traditional XO sauce, yet with a feminine whisper that reads velvety and mellow on the mouth. It serves as the quintessential essence of this dish that bridges the gap between the traditional and the modern, the French and the Cantonese, creating a harmonious culinary masterpiece.

While still immersed in the enchanting fairy tale of the abyssal depths, the next veal dish transports us away from the shore. Featuring French veal saddle drenched in a saffron veal jus with sherry vinegar, the dish is paired with carrot in three ways. A whole baked carrot with bacon and chives is presented on the plate, just like one might expect from a traditional veal dish, yet the carrot flan with saffron and ginger capped with sliced of carrot carpaccio soon carries the dish out from the ordinary land of gastronomy.

Our French lunch journey now concludes with a traditional finale of sweets after several exploratory courses. A strawberry yogurt mousse adorned with slices of strawberry, toasted almonds, and a quenelle of vanilla-strawberry ice cream satisfies our sweet cravings with flawless execution of traditional dessert techniques. The subsequent chocolate soufflé, served with vanilla gelato, continues to astonish us with its divine airiness and heavenly velvety texture, surpassing any traditional soufflé experienced by our taste buds in history. Finally, an ordinary petit fours collection is presented in a jewelry box, featuring chocolate cream choux with rice puff and torched marshmallow, housemade sesame caramel chocolate, and milk tart with caramel jus. The petit fours finally forms the coda, bringing our degustation journey to a soft landing.

