

DAVID SHAW
AUGUST 25TH, 2020

FROM CHAGNY TO SHANGHAI
TRADITION IS INNOVATION!

YANN KLEIN

Originally from Alsace, He debuted his apprentice at the age of 16. After studying in culinary school, he obtained the Bachelor Culinary Management at Institut Paul Bocuse in France and worked with the leading French Michelin-starred chefs including Anne-Sophie Pic (Beau-Rivage Palace, two Michelin stars) and Emmanuel Renaut (Flocon de Sel, three Michelin stars).

Chef Klein joined Maison Lameloise in May 2012 and cooked alongside internationally renowned, three-Michelin starred Chef Eric Pras. Working with Michelin-starred chefs allowed Yann Klein to accumulate a variety of gastronomic knowledge, to experience different culinary approaches and to discover a diversity of authentic products and tastes.

ERIC PRAS

At age fifteen, Eric Pras started cooking as if it was a religion, this is his vocation and his mission. After trained at the Hôtel Central de Renaison, he then worked at some of the most famous restaurants and apprenticed under numerous famous chefs, including Maison Troisgros, Bernard Loiseau, Pierre Gagnaire, Antoine Westermann, La Belle Otéro, and Régis Marcon.

In 2004, he received the award and honor of “Meilleur Ouvrier de France”, recognizing his extraordinary career and distinguishing him among the most talented chefs of his generation. In 2009, Jacques Lameloise left his position to Eric Pras as head chef of the Maison Lameloise Restaurant.

LE GRAND MENU

AMUSE BOUCHE

“Savories from Chagny & Shanghai”

LANGOUSTINES

Marinated and Crispy Langoustines

Celeriac | Green Apple | Caviar

Fallot Mustard Cream

WILD SEABASS

Grilled Filet | Modern Tian | Shellfish

Verbena Sabayon

PORCINI

Thin Puff Tarte of Roasted Porcinis

And Bellota Ham

BEEF STRIPLOIN RANGERS VALLEY M7

Seared | Carrots and Black Truffle

CHEESE TASTING

Roquefort | Pont-l'Évêque | Époisses de Bourgogne

WHITE PEACH

Lemon Balm and Black Tea Flavors

Vineyard Peach Granite

MIGNARDISES

As a Burgundy wine enthusiast, I firmly believe that there is no better way to appreciate burgundy wines than pilgrimaging them at such a restaurant like Maison Lameloise who nestles on the terroirs of burgundy since a century ago. Now thanks to chef Eric Pras and Yann Klein that I can enjoy the quintessences of both bourguignon cuisine and wine without actually being in Burgundy. With the help of Pierre Lafargue, the general manager of Maison Lameloise Shanghai, I reserved three wines ahead of my reservation.

2008 is a textbook vintage for champagne, and with a pinot noir percentage as high as 75% and its unique “fût en chene” aging process, the champagne exhibits deep and sophisticated aroma and taste. As for the white wine, I picked a bottle of 2014 Meursault-Porusots. 2014 is a quintessential year for Cote d'Or whites, and Comtes Lafon produced the most elegant and beautiful wine in the Meursault region. 1999 is a great and fecund year for Cote d'Or reds, and latricières yields the most elegant yet serious wine among all nine grand crus of Gevrey Chambertin.

FOIE GRAS BONBON

White Chocolate, Mango Sea Salt, Passionfruit

Our epicurean journey unfolds with a cup of fresh yet elegant jasmine tea infused with cucumber and apple, then assortments of amuse bouches are presented before long. The first one is a foie gras bonbon, in which foie gras core is counterpointed by an extremely thin and milky white chocolate coat, finished with mango sea salt and passionfruit. The chocolate exhibits subtle sweetness that well balanced the brininess of foie, while tropical elements further elevated the flavor with similar yet altered nuances.

Then we are served with a duo of potato soufflés and lobster gelée. The potato soufflé showcases a delicately thin and brittle outer layer that is prepared elaborately in heart shape, embracing the velvety and creamy potato puree. The potato soufflé constitutes a stepping stone for the lobster gelée which emits psychedelic flavors from reach pescetarian umami to a subtle hint of sweetness and sublimates the aftertaste of the potato by layering a splash of oceanic freshness. The lobster gelée is underscored by a piece of cracker who in a similar yet altered way provides a complementary texture.

AMUSE BOUCHE

Potato Puff, Lobster Gelée

AMUSE BOUCHE
Tomato Cracker, Parmesan Filling

AMUSE BOUCHE
Saffron Potato Mayonnaise, Parsley Crust, Snail

BREAD & BUTTER
Brioche and Feuilleté

The amuse bouche courses continue with tomato cracker stick filled with parmesan cream and an escargot nestling inside a parsley crust sphere finished with saffron potato mayonnaise. While we are having the amuse bouches, the waiter presents us with a tray of freshly baked bread, including traditional baguette, brioche made in a similar shape of pain escargot, feuilleté, cornbread, and grain bread that is similar to Pain de Campagne. The brioche is too crispy in the outside and the feuilleté is over hydrated, resulting in a sticky texture. The two kinds of butter paired with the bread also lack essential flavors and richness.

HONEYDEW

Salami | Coriander | Trout Skin

The final amuse bouche is a trio of honeydew spheres, crowned with its own gelée and crispy trout skin, engulfed in a honeydew consommé infused with coriander, finished with a sprinkle of salami. As the summertime homage to the classical quail egg amuse bouche of Maison Lameloise, this dish features honeydew that is executed into three spheres where the quail egg shape echoes, in addition, the salami and honeydew combination is another recap of the traditional duo of Jamon Iberica and cantaloupe, amalgamating the condensed unctuousness, orchard freshness, exotic salinity, and silky sweetness in one bite.

LANGOUSTINES

Celeriac, Green Apple, Caviar, Fallot Mustard Cream

Perhaps the best-known dish by chef Eric Pras is this langoustine dish in which langoustines are prepared in two ways, cooked and uncooked, singing in perfect harmony. The dish should be consumed alternately with one bite of the carpaccio part and one bite of the cooked crispy part according to the chef. The carpaccio of langoustine nestles on a bed of green apple gelée and celeriac cream. Thin cracker, Fallot mustard cream, and apple salad are further blended into this narcotic melange. A crowning touch of Yunnan caviar is finally added on top of the concoction, lifting the whole to another dimension. The carpaccio part already exhibits comprehensive aroma and multi-sensational textures that are too hard to analyze within one bite. The langoustine offers a pristine sweetness and elastic texture, which is soon sublimated by the orchard freshness of apple and celeriac and greenish, fresh spicy, and subtly savory taste of the Fallot mustard cream. The crispy crack and explosive caviar carry contrastive texture to balance the medley. As for the other part, a lightly cooked langoustine tail is coated by a layer of fried rice, finished with a splash of caramelized thyme rosemary lemon sauce.

WILD SEABASS

Grilled Filet | Modern Tian | Shellfish | Verbena Sabayon

The finesse continues to be delivered in the seabass course. With a fine filet cut of wild seabass captured in Fujian province being the centerpiece, the dish is further nourished by a Provencal Tian, a nostalgic touch handcrafted with classic provencal manners and innovative details synchronically, a reminiscence of the pastorale temperament. The filet and tian are like a binary star system, while the core is counterpointed and further enriched by razor clam, smoked mayonnaise, and mashed eggplant. The filet is grilled to preserve the juiciness and then confit in olive oil, adding another dimension of aristocratic unctuousness and umami.

Finally being dressed up in a silky yet foamy coat of verben sabayon, the seabass is highly aphrodisiac in a unique way that is irresistible for even the most fastidious connoisseurs. The idea of contrasts between warm versus cool, and raw versus cooked is inherited from the fist langoustine course. A side dish of raw seabass tartare is delivered here, nourished by lemon juice, lemon oil, mashed eggplant, and smoked mayonnaise. The ultimate freshness and even a touch of delicate sweetness are awakened to counter the heat and richness emanated from the main portion.

PORCINI

Thin Puff Tarte of Roasted Porcinis, Bellota Ham

As we move on to meat sessions, the famous porcini dish is first served. Unfortunately, the porcini is over hydrated and too thin to deliver juiciness and earthy aroma as well as to support the texture.

The bellota ham is sourcing from the shoulder part of Iberica bellota pigs that are fed with only acorns, however, the bellota ham here is also over recessive that fails to reveal enough aroma and flavors on the palate. The supportive puff tarte, on the other hand, is way too thick that presumptuously usurps the flavors and textures of both the porcini and the ham, immense both the precious ingredients in the puff's noxious unctuousness.

The most disappointing course throughout the dinner was probably this beef dish. The M7 stripe loin sourcing from Rangers Valley of Australia is rather chewy and hard to cut, it is dry and without enough unctuousness to bring out its musky umami. The carrot ravioli seems abrupt here due to its relatively light body and fresh and pristine flavor. Black truffle, on the other hand, exhibits excessive richness that engulfed everything else. The black truffle puree emits an even greater amount of salinity which is so condensed that in a weird way tastes somehow bitter and unpleasant.

BEEF STRIPLOIN RANGERS VALLEY M7

Seared, Carrot Ravioli, Black Truffle

CHEESE TASTING

Roquefort, Pont-l'Évêque, Époisses de Bourgogne

Between the last main course and the dessert section is a cheese tasting session. A cart of nine kinds of cheeses is offered to me. I decide to try the Roquefort from Saint-Affrique, Pont-l'Évêque from Normandy, and Époisses from Burgundy. A dish of fig and apple brandy jelly and some raisins are offered to pair with my cheese trio. I start with the Époisses de Bourgogne, an extremely soft washed rind cheese that is smear-ripened and made with cow milk. Époisses cheese is washed in brine and Marc de Bourgogne, the local pomace brandy, thus exhibits a comprehensive aroma profile and pungent taste on the palate. The second one is another soft washed rind cheese made with cow milk called Pont-l'Évêque. This is an uncooked and unpressed cheese, softer than the Époisses but carries similar yet serious and fresh-spicy pungent flavor. Finally I move on to the most popular Roquefort, the best known blue cheese made with ewe milk. Roquefort displays semi hard texture and tangy flavors.

WHITE PEACH

Lemon Balm and Black Tea Flavors, Vineyard Peach Granite

The main dessert is an orchid fantasy tributing the orchard peach dancing in perfect harmony with lemon balm cream and black tea flavors. The dish highlights peach by presenting it with various textures and flavors, from the fresh flesh to silky sorbet and coarser granite ice cream. The splendid intro of peach is soon enlivened by a light cracker filled with lemon balm cream who exhibits essential herbal and citrus aroma that creates a fresh foil for the note of black tea to stand out. The black tea flavor then wraps the peach in a veil of mysticism and charm.

In celebration of Chinese Valentine's day, the restaurant presents us with a glass of Laurent-Perrier Cuvée Rosé, arguable the most well-known rosé. The juice possesses a deep and robust aroma of black currant, black berries, and violet, as well as suave bubbles and textures on the palate.

QIXI WINE PAIRING

Laurent-Perrier Cuvée Rosé

MIGNARDISES

Assortment of Housemade Chocolate and Pâte à Choux

TAKE HOME GIFTS

Assortment of Housemade Chocolate Bonbon, Qixi Madeleine

The mignardises are served right after the dessert course, featuring a refreshing palate-cleansing blackcurrant parfait wrapped in a delicate chocolate coat, a chocolate sphere with Tonka bean flavor, a lemon pâte à choux, and finally a heart-shaped sea salt caramel chocolate prepared exclusively for Chinese valentines day. Two take-home gifts are kindly offered, with one heart-shape madeleine that is well moisturized and perfectly soft, and four housemade chocolate bonbon of various flavors.